Steele Mackaye's play of the above name, presented at the Opera House last night for the first time in Wheeling, shows some signs, but they are slight, of the genius of which the author is undoubtedly the possessor. The play contains some things that are fine, more that are the reverse, and a great cleal that is merely commonplace. Some situations are really dramatic; others, intended to be so, are reciliculous. The conception of the main them of the play is brilliant, and in some seenes it is handled with rare skill; but the poorer parts of the play are enough to damn it. What good acting could do for it was certainly done. There was but one poor performer in the whole cast, The "Mrs. Fleming" of Mrs. Archer, the "John Fleming" of Mrs. Mackaye, and the "Prof. Tracy," of F. F. Mackey, were particularly well done.

Tonight the same company will give the same author's dramatitation of Judge Tourge's "A Fool's Errand," and curiosity, if no other motive, will draw a large audience. The fame of the story is such and its contemporaneous interest of such an unique character that all will desire to see the story acted on the stage.

The large number of prominent business men of this city who are insured in the Ohio Valley of Wheeling will no doubt be pleased to learn that C. G. Dillion, of this city, and G. R. Tingle and T. B. If the Ohio Valley, of Wheeling, like all the ascoclations of this State, had agreed in their certificates to pay only a part of what they collected on an assessment-even if that part was ten per cent, or less—they would be all right and comply with the Ohio law. Messrs. Wiley and Wetherald will move of the different factories in the city dependent upon the water works for their watersupplies for running their works, when the streams suddenly falled. Most of the factories shut it down, but some whose operations only demanded a moderate supply of water, improvised some means of securing it, either by rigging up an attachment for their pumps with tanks and barrels, and keeping these full by hauling or carrying; or, where proximity to the river, creek or some other source of supply made it pessible, by connecting their pumps with the water by means of these. Some of the plans adopted were ingenious, but to be obliged to resort to them was worse then annoying. The engine in the Invallidencem's mechanical department was idle all day, and in the evening a sufficient supply for the night was hauled from the river in barrels on a dray. Households ywhich were near the few wells in the city were fortunate, and managed to keep up the cullinary department thereby, while most families were obliged to have water hauled or carried from the river.

The cause of the sudden stoppage was, not generally known, Inquiry at the power house revealed the fact that about five clock yesterday morning the pumping cranf of the old south pumping engine had suddenly broken snap off. This left only the old nortar jump to supply the city and keep a store of water in the basin for an emergency, for the twe works were in the basin for an emergency, for the twe workington pump has been disabled for some time by the breaking of the suction pipe, connecting it with the water in the river. Mr. Watt, of J. H. Watt & Co., of Barnesville, was in town Tuesday on business. The firm has now been altered to a joint-stock company. This establishment was frightened from coming to Bellaire by the diphtheria of this summer, but the advantages in a business point of view may yet bring us the concern. The coke used by the company goes through here and the sand is bought here, and each car load of either costs over fifteen dollars to take it from here to Barnesville. Besides that, car wheels for Colorado and the other mining points of the West have to be shipped first to Belaire and back right through Barnesville, to get the lowest rates of freight. pipe leading from the remaining pump to the reservoir on the hill burst. The works were thus left without a single pump in working order.

Work was at once begun replacing the bursted section of pipe with a new one. It was found that the pipe, which was sixteen inches in diameter and had been orn very thin by the action of the water and sediment. It was thought last night that this break could be repaired by this morning.

The backen crank was sent to Sweeney's foundry to be duplicated, and last night, a few minutes before 10 o'clock, the new crank was cast. It weighs about 4,400 pounds, and cannot be removed from the mold until to-day, after which it will have to be finished, which will make it impossible to replace the crank in its place until to-night.

This accident shows the necessity of having duplicate parts for all movable parts of the machinery of the Water Works. This was several times proposed, but as often rejected by far-seeing Councilmen.
